

There was no reason why Lord Granville should withhold his testimony. He had to bear, in the first instance, the full brunt of hostile criticism. The discredit and disgrace fell upon him as Foreign Minister. They fell so heavily as to threaten to drive him from that great office. But Mr. Gladstone formed his own judgment, and Lord Salisbury, too. Lord Granville had to be content with the Colonial Secretaryship, and Lord Rosebery succeeded him in the place he had twice before held. From that moment, though neither Lord Salisbury nor Lord Granville care to mention the fact, Mr. Gladstone's interference with foreign affairs ceased. During the short and troubled term of his third Ministry, there were no scandals in Egypt or on the Continent. The sound-school principles of diplomacy enunciated by Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain in 1874, Lord Granville still took a deep and constant interest in foreign affairs—and it is probable he did not intend to extend to the supervision of them. Lord Rosebery had a free hand; with what excellent results we all know. Lord Granville's evidence, therefore, has to be qualified to the

Mr. Seward turned away, and the speaker said: "I thought pathetic," and replied, in a voice which I thought pathetic: "Ah, sir, you will never become a voter. It is not worth the wait for that. The people of my country are not waiting for President." "But Mr. Seward turned for the nomination after the word."

A Sensible Precaution.

Though disease cannot always be conquered, its first approach can be checked. But not only is the use of a medicinal safeguard to be recommended on the first appearance of a malady, but a wise discrimination should be exercised in the choice of a remedy. For thirty years Dr. Hoesler's Stomach Bitters has been the reigning specific for dyspepsia, fever and ague, a loss of physical stamina, liver complaint and other disorders, and has been most emphatically indorsed by medical men as a health and strength restorative. It is indeed a wise precaution to use this sovereign febrifuge against and alterative in the early stages of disease, for it effectually counteracts it, if the malady belongs to that large class to which this sterling medicine is adapted. Not only is it efficacious, but pure and harmless.
